OCTOBER CHAPTER MEETING

David Warner, presentation on the Sacred Style of Singing

October 10, 1991

8:00 p.m. (note time change)

E-400 HFAC, BYU

David would be a world-class tenor if only he would trade his Provo address for a New York one. Because David understands the spiritual qualities of sacred choral singing, we can expect an insightful presentation.

Please bring your ward and choir conductors, as well as any youth you know who are studying organ or conducting.

(Remember that parking is limited; so come early to find a parking space.)

THE DEAN'S DOLLOP

When The Sound of Music was released nearly thirty years ago, we could all identify with the 'De Re Mi' song because that was how we were taught to sing in school. That method is now in eclipse. We were also taught a style of singing that worked well for sacred singing. Due, in part, to culture shifts and largely to the introduction of the microphone, this classical/sacred style has been lately lost. Now that we hear the sacred repertoire mostly in the concert hall and not in church, we are discovering that sacred music, to be sacred, must invite, interact with, and inhere the Holy Spirit. It is the spiritual qualities that delineate the sacred style of singing. This style goes at least back to when the sons of morning sang together for joy.

At a time when God is considered not demonstrable, when men assert that God no longer operates in their lives, when science has become our golden calf, when we are forced to build secular bricks without any spiritual straw, there has arisen a group of continental philosophers who assure us that mankind can continue only in ethical relationships. In this search for saintliness, the sacred style of singing becomes central.

It becomes important to rediscover this style, to train our brothers and sisters in this style, perform good music for the greater glory of God, and be succored in the process.
